"An explosion of love on every level. From butterflies to snakes to the inter-relationships of all characters… "
(Donald Sutherland, INTERVIEW Magazin)

Synopsis: A young woman, obsessed with Buster Keaton, arrives at Nirvana House, a private asylum for former Hollywood Stars where Keaton allegedly underwent detoxification during the 1930s. Unfortunately, the once elegant institution has just been taken over by its inmates following the unexpected death of its chief physician. They have elected one of their own to run the place, the eccentric O'Connor (Donald Sutherland). Her presence is viewed with such alarm that he promptly ties her in an SJ…
"Nirvana is the transcendence of all factors that determine the burden of being, the extinction of the lust for life and the delusion of perceiving reality in being". In Buster's Nirvana, elaborate though futile activity is the order of the day, not to repress the energies inherent in the "lust of Life", but to stimulate, kindle and incite them with concentrated purpose… an atmospheric whimsical comedy with juicy dialog ("Treat it like....a second skin!"
